LETTERS: Partnership Gwinnett a leader in bringing us out of bad economy

In today's gloomy reality, Partnership Gwinnett is absolutely a shining light in our community, with the community improvement districts coming in a close second. We all know that the tides eventually will turn, but the efforts of Partnership Gwinnett, a Gwinnett Chamber of Commerce project, are going to bring that ship turning around much faster. Also keeping us ahead of the curve is the continual progress being made by Gwinnett County's three CIDs.

In today's gloomy reality, Partnership Gwinnett is absolutely a shining light in our community, with the community improvement districts coming in a close second. We all know that the tides eventually will turn, but the efforts of Partnership Gwinnett, a Gwinnett Chamber of Commerce project, are going to bring that ship turning around much faster. Also keeping us ahead of the curve is the continual progress being made by Gwinnett County's three CIDs.

This week, the Gwinnett Place CID decided to make a statement by increasing its donation to the Partnership Gwinnett effort by 10 percent. In a time when some of the initial pledges have been revisited and cut, our board felt that it made a good statement to increase our donation and bring attention to how important and how successful the Partnership Gwinnett movement is.

I personally cannot praise Nick Masino and his staff enough for their well-directed and clear vision of how this county should be shaped in our future. I feel like the average guy on the street has very little knowledge of these successes in our community.

Congratulations to Partnership Gwinnett, its staff, participants and all who contribute to this great effort.

— Mark Williams
Chairman, Gwinnett Place CID
