GPCID Unveils New Look For Pleasant Hill Road Bridge

Submitted by Gwinnett Place CID

The Gwinnett Place Community Improvement District (CID) today officially unveiled images showing what drivers will see as they approach the reconstructed Pleasant Hill Road bridge.

The renderings feature a dynamic and aesthetically pleasing treatment to the fence work that will line the bridge as the diverging diamond interchange (DDI) is installed beginning early next year.

A 16-member project steering committee developed the bridge's new appearance. Over multiple months of meetings and charrettes, diverse opinions were gathered from international communities, area business owners, residents, county government staff, CID board members, planning consultants, Chamber of Commerce representatives and City of Duluth officials.

CID Chairman Leo Wiener said special lighting, colors and landscaping will increase pedestrian and driver access while branding the bridge as the gateway entrance to greater Gwinnett Place.

"Our stakeholders have helped us craft a distinctive entry to the county's central business district," Wiener said. "I believe they will be proud of the finished product and will benefit greatly from having the DDI project completed in early 2012."

The bridge renderings are available at Facebook.com/GwinnettPlaceCID. More information about the DDI is available under "projects and plans" and "project initiatives" at the CID's website - GwinnettPlaceCID.com.
