Polytron stays put to grow

Polytron, Inc., a leading engineering consultancy and systems integration firm based in Duluth, has doubled its 3300 Breckinridge Blvd. office space – where the company has thrived for 30 years.

“The manufacturing industry is expanding and growing and Polytron is growing to meet the demand,” says founder and president, Charlie Jager, P.E. “Being here a long time, when you’ve seen rapid change, you lose sight of the different types of challenges that come with a mature county.”

Jager made the decision to keep operations in Gwinnett after meeting with the Gwinnett Chamber and the Gwinnett Place CID, learning of progress being made to retain and attract businesses to the area.

Many Fortune 500 clients engage Polytron to expand and update their manufacturing operations to respond quickly to the ever changing consumer and market demands, increase efficiency using new automation innovations and improve safety compliance.

In 2013, Polytron earned the CSIA CERTIFICATION.

“We are well positioned to respond to the manufacturing renaissance in the South and anywhere our clients need us to be,” explains Brent Stromwall, vice president of Business Development. “We can help Georgia, through different economic development groups, make the appeal that here in the state is a solid engineering consulting firm that helps with manufacturing systems.”
